THE ECONOMIC STATE

JANUARY 2026

The year opened with a slew of impactful geopolitical and macro headlines including the US strike on Venezuela, tensions with NATO allies regarding Greenland, the selloff of Japanese government bonds and the DOJ serving the Federal Reserve with a subpoena threatening a criminal investigation regarding headquarter renovations. Although there was a brief equity selloff and short-term spike in volatility stoked by all of the aforementioned macro issues, stocks ended the month positively. Amidst the uncertainty, precious metals such as gold and silver surged +30% and +70% respectively, before suffering sharp declines and ending the month up +14% and +43%. The last day of trading in the month also revealed the nomination of Kevin Warsh, a former Fed governor from 2006-2011, to be the next Chairman of the Federal Reserve.

Macroeconomics

The Federal Open Market Committee (FOMC) held its benchmark interest rate steady at 3.5-3.7% at their meeting in January. The Fed cited indicators of solid economic growth and a less than robust but stabilizing labor market to pause their recent rate cutting trend. Key data releases from December indicated that inflation as measured by CPI remained elevated at an annualized 2.7% and the BLS unemployment rate was unchanged at 4.4% with 50,000 jobs added. The recent partial government shutdown means some further delays on relevant data, such as the January jobs report.

The Conference Board Consumer Confidence Index survey fell sharply for a sixth consecutive month in January to 84.5; down nearly 10 points as all five components decreased.

Equity Markets

US equities posted a ninth consecutive month of positive returns with the S&P 500 up 1.5% while also achieving several new all-time highs, including an intra-day milestone of crossing 7,000 near month-end. Sector performance was notably divergent with Energy (+8.7%) and Materials (+7.5%) the top contributors, while Financials (-2.4%) and Tech (-1.7%) were the weakest. Performance contributors broadened as equal-weight indices outperformed their cap-weighted counterparts, small- and mid-capitalization stocks outperformed large cap, value exceeded growth and cyclical sectors outpaced defensives.

International equity markets outperformed the US this month with emerging markets (EM) surging +8.9% and developed markets (EAFE) up +5.2%. Regionally, the Far East and Pacific (both +6.7%) led developed markets, followed by Europe (+4.5%). Latin America (+15.4%) led in the emerging index. On a country basis, Japan (+6.6%) was in front for developed markets, while Korea (+28.1%) and Brazil (+16.8%) posted the strongest emerging market results. The further weakened US Dollar was a factor as the MSCI EAFE Local Currency (+3.2%) was 200bp behind the same index noted above in USD.

Fixed Income

Fixed income markets were mixed with the Bloomberg US Aggregate Index barely positive. The U.S. Treasury yield curve flattened modestly as the Fed held rates steady. Investment-grade (IG) corporates, high yield, and asset-backed securities spread levels remained tight during the month.

Looking Ahead

The outlook continues to evolve as markets absorb the implications of pending new Fed leadership, macro events and economic numbers. The divergence between small-cap and large-cap performance, along with emerging market strength, may suggest the markets are broadening from the tech led stocks of the last several years... Fixed income markets will continue to focus on the trajectory of long-term yields, given fears of inflation re-emergence and credit-spread dynamics, as official economic data is released.
